STERILIZATION ROOM:

Dedicated area for cleaning and storage of instruments

6 STEP STERILIZATION PROTOCOL:

Every instrument used in your mouth is free from infection causing bacteria, virus and spores.

It means you are protected from hospital acquired infections such as HIV, Hepatitis-B, Herpes etc.

All you need to know about brushing your baby's teeth.

Taking care of baby's teeth as soon as the first tooth erupts in the mouth is very important to prevent decay occurring in teeth later in life. There is a lot of confusion in parents regarding how to clean the teeth, which brush to use, and which paste to use. Read on to solve all your queries!

1. When to start brushing?

Ideally you should start brushing even before the teeth have erupted, when the baby is 3-4 month old. Gently cleaning the gum pads and tongue with gauze wrapped around the finger helps in cleaning mouth. Massaging action with the gauze helps to soothe irritation on gums when teeth erupt. It also makes the baby accustomed to brushing.

2. Which brush to use?

After the teeth erupt you can start to use a finger brush as they are soft, gentle and sterilisable and gradually progress to baby tooth brushes once the baby is over an year old.

3. Which tooth paste to use?

Initially no toothpaste is required. Wet the brush with water and you are good to go. However, if you want to use a toothpaste, use a non-fluoridated one. That means it should not contain any amount of fluoride as babies don't know how to spit. Once, the baby learns how to spit (after 3-4 years of age), a pea sized amount of fluoridated toothpaste can be used for brushing.

4. How to brush?

You don't need to awkwardly hold the baby over the wash basin while brushing, since no spitting is required. Gently lay the child in your lap and clean the teeth. The baby may initially struggle and may not want his teeth to be brushed, but don't give up. Try to distract, be gentle yet firm.

5. How may times to brush?

Twice daily. Once, in the morning and then in the night just before sleeping.
